CHAPTER XXII

RECAPITULATION OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS
Reading "The Black Box" is a story of the most thrilling and mysterious nature. It is a story of a man who has been accused of a crime which he has never committed. The story is told in a way that is both interesting and exciting. It is a story that will keep you guessing until the very end.

AN elderly lady, dressed in a somewhat oppressive black, with a big cameo brooch at her throat and a black satin bag in her hand, was being shown by the steward to a seat by the side of the door. She acknowledged the captain's greeting with a "Good evening, captain," and said, "I understood from the second steward that the seat on your right hand would be reserved for me. I am Mrs. Foster Howe."

The captain received the announcement with a smile. "Very pleased to have you at the table, madam," he replied. "As in the evening, I have the honor to offer you my apologies, captain. I have discovered a most interesting book upon the habits of seals. It kept me engrossed until the very last moment."

"Very disagreeable habits, those I've noticed," Mrs. Foster Howe sniffed. "Madam," the professor assured her, "yours is just a superficial view. For myself, I must confess that the days upon which I learn something new in the ways of the world are the days of my life. Today is an example. I have learned something new about seals, and I am hungry."

"Well, you'll have to stay hungry a long time, this table," Mrs. Foster Howe snapped. "Seems to me that the service is going to be abominable."

The steward, who had just arrived, presented a cup of bouillon to Mrs. Foster Howe. "The others had all been served. Quest stirred it thoughtfully."

"And as to the custom," Mrs. Foster Howe continued, "of serving gentlemen before ladies, it is, I suppose, peculiar to this steamer."

"Quest hastily laid down his spoon, raised the cup of bouillon and presented it with a little bow to his neighbor."

"Pray, allow me, madam," he begged. "The steward was to blame."

"She had better be carried out," he whispered. "It was all done in a moment. There was nothing but Mrs. Foster Howe's empty place at the table and the cup of bouillon, to remind them of what had happened."

"Was it a faint?" Lenora asked. "We shall know directly," the captain replied. "Better keep your places, I think. Steward, serve the dinner as usual."

"The man held out his hand to withdraw the cup of bouillon, but Quest drew it toward him."

"Let it wait a moment," he ordered. He glanced at the captain, who nodded back. In a few moments the doctor reappeared. He leaned down and whispered to the captain.

"Dead!" the captain gave no sign. "Better call it heart failure," the doctor continued. "I'll let the people know quietly. I don't in the least understand the symptoms, though."

Quest turned around. "I happen to have my chemical chest with me, and some special testing tubes. If you'll allow me, I'd like to examine this cup of bouillon. You might come round, too, if you will."

"The captain nodded. "I'd better stay here for a time," he decided. "I'll follow you presently."

The service of dinner was resumed. Laura, however, sent plate after plate away. The captain watched her anxiously.

END CLEARANCE SALE

The ordinary clothing merchant carries the ends of his suitings to the dull seasons, January and February or July and August, before he cuts prices, in hopes that he will dispose of some of his ends at the long price. My idea is different. The only way I can make a profit at my prices is to turn my stock completely every so often. That keeps everything in my store practically brand new. I shouldn't have an end from one season to another, and in order to accomplish this, it is necessary two or three times a year to clean up these goods that I don't have enough of in stock to sample out to different stores. This is my clean-up season.

The Security Trust Company, one of Hartford, Conn.'s, big banking institutions, administrators to the estate of a recently deceased tailor who sold high priced clothes to measure, sold me this past week some two thousand yards of ends that I must clean out in order to sell regular stock. Some of these suitings sold as high as $30, $35, $40, absolutely all wool and worsted. Blue Serges, Black and Blue Clays, Oxford Mixtures, Tartan Plaids, all the fine Drapes that this tailor sold for full dress suits, irrespective of his prices, my price suit to order,

$10.00

These goods are ranged in a line in my store so every man can be his own salesman.

Hundreds of styles of trouserings, sold by him from $7, $8, $10, my price to order, $3.25

Hundreds of Suits uncalled for from my different stores I have placed in my New York stores. Irrespective of former prices uncalled for suits, $5, $6, $7

Uncalled for Trousers, all worsted and wool $1.75
